

The Global DowSM

The Global DowSM is a 150-stock index of the most innovative, vibrant and influential corporations from around the world. Only leading blue-chip stocks are included in the index.

The underlying philosophy of The Global DowSM is much like that of the Dow Jones Industrial Average. For example, the index includes companies with a long history of success, and a wide following among investors. Its components, like those of The Dow, are selected by editors of Dow Jones.

But unlike the Industrial Average, The Global DowSM tracks leading companies from around the world – and not just based on size and reputation, but also on their promise for the future. In recognition that global wealth is no longer concentrated in a few countries, The Global DowSM has been designed to cover both developed and emerging economies – as well as companies from emerging sectors, such as alternative energy. The index reflects, as closely as possible, the global stock market as it is today, in terms of industries and regions. But emphasis is placed on also representing the global leaders of tomorrow.

Preference is given to companies with global reach rather than those dealing solely or mostly in their domestic markets. However, some industries such as Telecommunications and Utilities tend to be more local in nature. In those cases, the economic importance of the locality is taken into consideration.

In the interest of continuity, the index composition will be altered as seldom as possible—typically only when a major event such as a merger or acquisition affects one or more of the index components. When this happens, all of the other components will be reviewed as well.

The components of The Global DowSM are equally weighted. This means that price movements of the larger stocks have no greater impact on index performance than those of the smaller stocks.

The Global DowSM is calculated and disseminated in real time. Current and closing values can be accessed through a variety of media, including daily in The Wall Street Journal, and real time at www.djindexes.com.
